REPORT
ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION OF THE FIRST WORLD PUBLIC ASSEMBLY "NEW WORLD OF CONSCIOUS UNITY"

September 2025 – August 2026

1. FROM DECLARATION TO ACTION

The Declaration of the First World Public Assembly "New World of Conscious Unity", adopted in Moscow on 21 September 2025, established the fundamental principles and key areas of international public cooperation aimed at strengthening trust and mutual understanding among peoples, preserving cultural and civilizational diversity, promoting responsibility towards future generations, and advancing constructive cooperation.

One year later, the Assembly returns to the decisions adopted not only to take stock, but also to assess which provisions of the Declaration have received practical development, which mechanisms have been established, and which tasks require continued work.

For the World Public Assembly, it is essential not only to formulate ideas, but also to take consistent responsibility for putting them into practice.

This Report is the first stage of the annual monitoring provided for by the Declaration. Its purpose is to compare the stated areas of work with the practical results of the first year, indicate the level of development of the initiatives, and identify further steps.

2. THE FIRST YEAR OF IMPLEMENTATION: KEY RESULT

In 2025–2026, the principles of human dignity, shared responsibility towards future generations, justice, unity in diversity, solidarity and dialogue became the substantive foundation of the international projects of the World Peoples Assembly.

The main result of the first year of implementation of the Declaration was the transition from stated principles to the formation of a practical international infrastructure for public dialogue: regional platforms, partnership networks, representative offices abroad, expert mechanisms, business and humanitarian formats, and joint projects.

Key mechanisms included regional World Public Summits, the Days of the World Peoples Assembly, international public forums, the activities of the Scientific Expert Council and the Youth Assembly, the development of representative offices abroad and international partnerships, as well as cultural, educational, youth, scientific and expert, and business projects.

3. IMPLEMENTATION OF KEY AREAS

3.1. Public Diplomacy and Peace

Provided for by the Declaration.

Establishment of an International Platform for People-to-People Diplomacy to coordinate humanitarian initiatives and support dialogue through culture, education and interreligious engagement.

Implemented.

An international cycle of regional World Public Summits was established. World Public Summit. India, held on 23–26 March 2026, brought together more than 1,500 participants from 27 countries, including representatives of seven world religions; the Delhi Declaration was adopted as its outcome document.

World Public Summit. Latin America, held on 16–17 June 2026, brought together more than 500 representatives of various public and professional communities; more than 20 events took place over two days, and the Salvador Declaration became the outcome document.

World Public Summit. Africa, held on 29–30 July 2026, brought together more than 2,000 participants and over 100 speakers from more than 50 countries. The first Representative Office of the World Peoples Assembly on the African continent was opened in the Republic of Zambia, four cooperation agreements were signed, and the African Communiqué was adopted as the outcome document.

From 23 to 29 April 2026, the Days of the World Peoples Assembly were held in the Tunisian Republic: 14 events, more than 1,500 participants and 11 partner organisations. The International Contest “Leader of Public Diplomacy” continued. A Representative Office of the World Peoples Assembly in the Maghreb countries was opened.

The international public agenda was also advanced through the forums “Spirit of the Elbe: Humanitarian Dialogue and Memory as a Foundation for Cooperation” and “Charles de Gaulle and the Spirit of Dialogue”.

Result.

A system of interconnected international, regional and national platforms has been formed, enabling a transition from individual events to more sustainable public cooperation.

Status: has received substantial practical development.

Next step.

Develop regional platforms, representative offices abroad and direct partnership ties, strengthening the transition from event-based formats to permanent mechanisms of cooperation.

3.2. Economy and Social Responsibility

Provided for by the Declaration.

Development of international ethical approaches in business and social investment, mechanisms of solidarity-based development, and digital ecosystems for economic cooperation.

Implemented.

The business agenda became part of all three regional World Public Summits. Through the business forums “From Trust between People to Trust between Economies” in India, Brazil and Ethiopia, the geography of direct interaction among entrepreneurial and business communities expanded, while discussions addressed trust as a foundation for sustainable economic cooperation, the development of partnership ties, and joint initiatives.

The business formats of the Days of the World Peoples Assembly in Tunisia brought together issues of trade, investment, tourism, business cooperation and women’s entrepreneurship.

The World Peoples Assembly Business Community “Trust and Unity” is being formed as an international platform for developing direct business ties, partnerships and socially responsible entrepreneurship based on trust and mutual responsibility.

Result.

An international business community of the Assembly and an infrastructure for direct business interaction are taking shape, in which trust, responsibility and sustainable partnership ties are regarded as essential conditions for long-term economic cooperation.

Status: the area is actively developing; the “Trust and Unity” Business Community is being formed, and the geography of international business ties and partnerships is expanding.

Next step.

Continue the formation and international expansion of the World Peoples Assembly Business Community “Trust and Unity”, and develop the business forums “From Trust between People to Trust between Economies” as a permanent format for international business dialogue. Continue expert work on ethical approaches in business and social investment, mechanisms of solidarity-based development, and digital formats for economic cooperation.

3.3. Science and Technology

Provided for by the Declaration.

Development of ethical approaches to digital technologies and expansion of open access to scientific knowledge and technologies.

Implemented.

The international expert agenda of the Scientific Expert Council has included artificial intelligence, digital ecosystems, the humanitarian consequences of technological transformation, and the alignment of technological progress with humanitarian values and responsibility towards future generations. These issues were also considered at the regional World Public Summits.

Result.

An international expert space has been formed for discussing the humanitarian and ethical foundations of technological development.

Status: substantive work is developing; practical mechanisms require further elaboration.

Next step.

Move from expert discussion to the development of practical recommendations for human-centred and responsible technological development, as well as to the elaboration of mechanisms for the international exchange of scientific knowledge.

3.4. Culture and Education

Provided for by the Declaration.

Launch of the international programme “Cultural Bridge” to preserve heritage and support intercultural exchanges; creation of the World Digital Library of Knowledge of the World Peoples Assembly; support for the implementation of the Memorandum “On the Value of Monuments of the World’s Spiritual Heritage”; and development of institutions and practices for integrating sites of spiritual heritage into public and cultural life.

Implemented.

The cultural and educational areas have received systematic development within two programmes of the World Peoples Assembly — “The Unifying Power of Culture” and “Education of the Future”. These programmes have become practical mechanisms for advancing the cultural, educational and intercultural initiatives provided for by the Declaration.

The programme “The Unifying Power of Culture” brings together international forums and projects in culture, art, linguistic and ethnocultural diversity, historical heritage, national traditions and sport.

The programme “Education of the Future” is aimed at developing international cooperation in science and education, interaction among universities, new partnership formats, youth participation in the transformation of education, engagement with alumni, university-museum cooperation, and modern practices for the preservation of World Heritage sites.

Cultural and educational themes were also included in the programmes of the regional World Public Summits. In India, discussions addressed intercultural dialogue, education, and spiritual and humanitarian values; in Latin America, cultural sovereignty, linguistic heritage and traditions; in Africa, historical and cultural heritage, identity, education and science. In Tunisia, literary, cultural, children's and youth projects and international intercultural exchange were further developed.

The World Peoples Assembly digital application is being developed. Its structure includes a library section for the accumulation, systematisation and dissemination of knowledge and cultural and educational materials. The application is scheduled to be piloted at the Second World Public Assembly.

Result.

Culture and education have developed into systematic areas of the Assembly's work and practical instruments of public diplomacy, intercultural dialogue and mutual understanding among peoples. Dedicated programmes and projects have been established and are developing, while a digital infrastructure is being formed to expand international cultural and educational cooperation.

Status: the area is actively developing; implementation of the initiatives provided for by the Declaration continues through existing programmes, projects and emerging digital mechanisms of the Assembly.

Next step.

Complete the further development of the World Peoples Assembly digital application, including its library section. Following its pilot at the Second World Public Assembly, continue developing the application as a permanent digital platform for international cultural, educational and humanitarian cooperation, as well as further implementing the programmes "The Unifying Power of Culture" and "Education of the Future".

3.5. Youth Policy

Provided for by the Declaration.

Expansion of the activities of the Youth Assembly of the World Peoples Assembly, support for youth initiatives and social entrepreneurship, assistance in establishing the Youth Laboratory of the Future, and the holding of a Youth Summit and an International Children's Congress.

Implemented.

The youth area has received systematic development within the World Peoples Assembly programme "New Generation of the World", which brings together international educational, public-diplomacy, project-based and volunteer initiatives.

Key formats include the International Youth Forum “Generation of Unity”, the simulation exercises “CIS Model: Humanitarian Cooperation through the Eyes of Youth” and “Model World Public Summit”, the Lecture Series of the Youth Assembly of the World Peoples Assembly, the Youth Club, and the International Volunteer Community of the Youth Assembly of the World Peoples Assembly.

The youth agenda was included in the programmes of the regional World Public Summits and the Days of the World Peoples Assembly. In Tunisia, youth and children’s initiatives were implemented, including the international cultural triathlon “MIRoKIT”, which brought together children from Russia, Germany and Tunisia. Following the African Summit, the further development of the African Network of Young Leaders in Public Diplomacy was announced.

Result.

A programme framework for the Assembly’s international youth activities has been established. Youth participation is expanding in public diplomacy, international humanitarian cooperation, and educational, project-based and volunteer initiatives focused on responsibility for our shared future.

Status: the area is actively developing; the “New Generation of the World” programme is operating, and the international network of youth projects and formats of interaction is expanding.

Next step.

Continue developing the “New Generation of the World” programme and the international community of the Youth Assembly of the World Peoples Assembly, expanding project-based, educational and volunteer formats. Advance in practical terms the initiatives provided for by the Declaration to establish the Youth Laboratory of the Future, support youth social entrepreneurship, and hold a Youth Summit and an International Children’s Congress.

3.6. Interdisciplinary Research and Expert Cooperation

Provided for by the Declaration.

Expansion of the activities of the Scientific Expert Council, international interaction among experts and academic schools, and development of research programmes on civilizational processes and humanitarian modernisation.

Implemented.

In 2026, the Scientific Expert Council expanded the international geography of its activities: its meetings were held as part of the World Public Summits in India, Latin America and Africa. The expert agenda brought together issues relating to the evolution of values and culture, civilizational processes, digital ecosystems, sustainable development, energy, ecology, international security, and the humanitarian consequences of technological transformation.

Result.

Expert activities have acquired a more international and interdisciplinary character.

Status: has received practical development.

Next step.

Strengthen the research component, international cooperation among academic schools, and the connection between expert conclusions and the Assembly's practical initiatives.

4. IMPLEMENTATION AND MONITORING MECHANISMS

The Declaration provides for annual monitoring of implementation, the creation of working groups by area, publication of open reports, advancement of recommendations in cooperation with international organisations, and development of practical mechanisms for solidarity-based civilizational development.

During the first year, practical implementation mechanisms included regional World Public Summits, the Days of the World Peoples Assembly, international public forums, the Scientific Expert Council, the Youth Assembly, representative offices abroad, partnership agreements, and thematic international projects.

This Report is the first step towards a systematic practice of annually assessing the implementation of the decisions of the World Public Assembly.

5. TASKS REQUIRING CONTINUED WORK

The first year demonstrated different levels of maturity among the initiatives provided for by the Declaration. Alongside areas that have received substantial practical development, a number of mechanisms remain at the stage of formation.

Further work includes: establishing working groups in individual areas; developing the practice of open reporting; advancing the recommendations of the Declaration in cooperation with international organisations; forming the envisaged mechanisms of solidarity-based civilizational development; practical development of ethical approaches in business and technology; and development of permanent cultural, educational and youth projects.

This assessment does not diminish the significance of what has been achieved. On the contrary, it makes it possible to move from recording activities to managing results and ensuring continuity of decisions.

6. CONCLUSIONS: COMMON VALUES AS THE MORAL FOUNDATION OF CONSCIOUS UNITY

The first year of implementation of the Declaration has shown that conscious unity acquires practical meaning when it is expressed through sustainable ties among people, organisations, cultures and countries.

Regional World Public Summits, the Days of the World Peoples Assembly, international forums, partnership networks and expert platforms have expanded the geography of public diplomacy and demonstrated the possibility of conducting substantive dialogue and developing cooperation while preserving cultural and civilizational diversity.

During this period, a transition has begun from individual events to the formation of permanent mechanisms of cooperation. International programmes and professional communities of the Assembly are developing; youth, cultural, educational, business and expert formats are expanding; and a digital infrastructure for interaction is taking shape.

At the same time, the experience of the first year has posed a fundamental question for the Assembly: what moral foundations can underpin conscious unity, and what common values can unite people and peoples without erasing their cultural, national and civilizational differences?

It is precisely the search for an answer to this question that the Second World Public Assembly "New World: Values that Unite" addresses.

Common values do not imply uniformity. On the contrary, they make it possible to find common ground while preserving the identity, traditions and cultural distinctiveness of every people. Respect for human dignity, peace, trust, justice, responsibility, family and continuity between generations, spiritual and moral principles, and respect for cultural and linguistic diversity create the moral foundation on which conscious unity can be strengthened.

Common values become the moral foundation of conscious unity, while conscious unity becomes the basis of shared responsibility for the future.

The next stage, therefore, is to identify the value foundations capable of uniting people and peoples and to create conditions for their embodiment in sustainable international ties, concrete initiatives, joint projects and action.

The Second World Public Assembly is the next step in this shared movement — from awareness of unity to an understanding of common values capable of becoming the foundation for cooperation and our shared future.
